ADJECTIVES

Maxwell Owen Clark
“...whilst a man retains any portion of the thing called reason he is utterly incompetent to produce poetry...”

—Plato, Ion (P. B. Shelley translation)
I authored the following poem, ‘Adjectives’, in a single dissociative delirium. I only remember coming across it again on my cellphone many months later. My first confused suspicion was that a hacker had deposited it on my phone. I do get hackers (my first Facebook account, containing maybe a decade of posts, was recently stolen by Kenyan hackers). Presently, however, I am more confident in my own authorship of these entire 182 pages. They contain a more than less alphabetical list of adjectives—although I may have confused a few of their more proper grammatical cases. Many of the adjectives are also, if perhaps not strictly nonsensical (in my radical acceptance of empiricism), more respectfully said to exist in the realm of deeply unconscious instinct than not. So, there is an alphabetical order, summoned enigmatically out of my delirious unconsciousness, and its seeming predilection for poets not unlike Christian Bök and Kenneth Goldsmith. Then there is the superficial chaos of my same instinctual predilection for highly sound-calibrated pleonasms. This alphabet I’m using here was good at obliging me in this. All of this, then, with barely but the slightest wisps of reminiscence. I am taking responsibility for it, individually, but it was created out of a condition I hesitate vastly to call individual. A creation out of nothing, as it were. And being 182 pages long, the more traditional conceptualist sort of celebration of its unreadability could guide you on its easier road of appreciation. The difficulty of getting through it in one sitting still remains vexing, even especially for me. I wrote it, so I claim, and yet I’ve still no memories of reading it all the way through. It will take some “hacking” away at, even for myself, still then. And yet I desire this admission be ranked as a show of candor, and nowise be abused as the basis of a pejorative criticism. Of what little I have read of it so far, then, it often has a funny sort of “music box” automatism, that lends it some glistens of charm here and there. The music here is indeed in the repetitive consonance of the adjectives’ alphabetical order, almost but not quite like in alliteration. Again, I myself haven’t awakened to it very fully yet, and so clasp hereat to the Oulipean and Conceptualist traditions for justification. And they justify it amply so far. Surely mercy and goodness will follow me all the days of my life...
